EMOTIONS. THERE is sadness of the heart.

A sigh, a secret stealing tear;
A gloom, where sorrow bears no part,
That only comes when none are near. Amid the green-wood's dim profound,
Where sigh and moan the rocking trees,
Or where the waves' inconsistant sound
Joins the wild voices of the breeze:

Or at still midnight's solemn hour, When storm-winds rave along the sky.
Oft comes this melancholy power,
To move the tear, to heave the sigh.

> A good JOKE .- The correspondent from the N. York times relates a good joke that happined at Utica the day before the president arrived. Immediately after the staging was erected for his republican majesty to make a speech from, a big goat walked up the steps, and marched backward and for-ward with a most becoming gravity. The whigs around at once set up a shoat of their tory neighbors, and tauntingly told them that to-morrow Martin the First would follow in the footsteps of his illustrious prede-

the following admirable delineation of the character of Martin Van Buren, in the Newark Daily Advertisor:

At one time opposing universal suffrage at another advocating it! At one time voting for all the Trriff; at another, professing opposition to all! At one time going so far in favor of Internal Improvements by the General Government as to vote for toll-gates upon the Comberland Road, that the revenue might be extracted from the pockets of the Improvements by the General Government. At one time, supporting the United States Bank, and petitioning for the location of a Branch thereof at Albany; at another, proclaiming "uncompromising hostility," to the same Institution at one time in favor of a silence, but Reuben slept not. "Solitary and alone" he sat, like a grim sentinel on some beleagured rampart, unconscious that der is planted, the window is raised, their porting, and even glorifing Jackson! At RETERNORMENT and REPORM in the expenditure of $12,000,000 annually-at another, rigidly and resolutely opposing all efforts at RETHENCHMENT and REFORM, even when the annual expenditures reach the sum of $30-000,000! At one time co-operating with, aiding and abotting the Nullifiers; an another At one time friendly, far more friendly, than White of Harrison or Webster, to the BIGHTS
